extended from 9 to 11 months to allow time for curriculum planning and helping students with special needs.

Financial incentives should be used to attract "outstanding students" into the teaching profession, and "master teachers" should be used to train them.

The commission did not offer recommendations in several areas that have been priorities of the Reagan Administration, including tuition tax credits, prayer in the schools and abolition of the Department of Education.

In his remarks late this afternoon at a White House ceremony in which he was given a copy of the report, however, President Reagan said, "We'll continue administration efforts to cut budgetary programs."

"I believe the President has sent a signal from this report to his questioning of the current era. Government should be more responsible for education," he said.

Responsibilities

The report said states and local officials have the "primary responsibility for financing our schools" but added that the Government shares the responsibility for meeting the needs of the nation's "capped, disadvantaged students. The Federal Government has 'the primary responsibility to identify the national interest in education,'" it said.
