

Conventional Network Analysis (CNA) Assumptions

Goal 1:

1. show functional pathways and technology to improve their design and robustness
2. identify specific weak links, nodes and other substructures that, if modified or even eliminated, would improve system function
3. identify potential functional pathways capable to protect the existing system in case further changes are necessary
4. identify potential for system-level variations
5. identify that despite the system-level variations, the new state will still perform its function
6. make system more robust to the uncertainties in the system
7. show identifying/monitoring components identified
8. show the performance and structure of potential new state (new growing system) and the monitoring and growth
9. network used to characterize performance of modified system
10. identify a type of performance and structure and the potential for growth and evolution
11. identify a type of performance and structure and the potential for growth and evolution
12. identify a type of performance and structure and the potential for growth and evolution

Goal 2:

Regulation, structure and growth are critical to the function and the performance of a system. A system is a network of components and their interactions.

Conventional CNA Assumptions

Conventional CNA Assumptions for the network, model, system, and the system's growth

1. network: a network is a collection of nodes and edges. The nodes are the components and the edges are the interactions.
2. network growth: a network grows by adding new nodes and edges.
3. network evolution: a network evolves by changing the structure of the network.
4. network regulation: a network is regulated by the system's growth.
5. network monitoring: a network is monitored by the system's growth.
6. network identification: a network is identified by the system's growth.
