

Writing Exegetical Papers

Westminster Theological Seminary
Center for Theological Writing

Biblical studies classes ask you to perform exegesis on a passage of Scripture from a redemptive-historical, biblical-theological perspective. Some assignments will emphasize exegesis more while others will put more weight on biblical theology. This handout focuses on exegesis, and it addresses the writing and research questions that students typically encounter. Please consult with your professor about the content and methodology of exegesis.

My Method for Writing Exegetical Papers.

The following method is intended to outline the different steps of writing an exegetical paper. Following steps means that you do not need to be thinking about everything all at once, but you can instead focus on one aspect of the paper at a time. This can even make writing an exegetical paper fun.

Note: I try to do each step in one or two sittings to keep my momentum up. After each step, I let the material sit a few days so that it can seep in.

1. Study the passage yourself.

Goal: To arrive at a well-informed summary of what you think the passage means, along with some crucial questions you need to answer

In prayerful reliance on the Holy Spirit, use every way you know to seek to understand the text. Do word studies, discourse analysis, etc. In a word doc (your "notes" doc), write down everything you observe, along with questions you have. Don't attempt too much to organize these thoughts.

2. Study the secondary literature.

Goal: To get a sense of what general scholarship says about this passage, along with specific details that are useful for your paper

- a. In the same "notes" doc, make a list of all of the secondary resources that impinge on your text. Search the WTS library site, the ATLA religion database, Google Scholar, etc.
- b. Then, order these resources by what you think will be most helpful (high priority and low priority).
- c. Then look up as many of these as you can.
- d. As you read through each resource, take notes in your "notes" doc under the bibliographic reference for that resource. Mark the page number of each
