April 2, Wednesday 1-2

1) What are the two main ways that we define identity?

The two main ways that we define identity are the essentialist and the relational ways. The essentialist way is the one that we have been using. The relational way is the one that we have been using. The essentialist way is the one that we have been using. The relational way is the one that we have been using.

Essentialist way: identity is a property of things.

2) What is the main problem with the essentialist way of defining identity?

The main problem with the essentialist way of defining identity is that it is too narrow. It only works for things that have a single essential property. It doesn't work for things that have multiple essential properties.

Relational way: identity is a relation between things.

3) What is the main problem with the relational way of defining identity?

The main problem with the relational way of defining identity is that it is too broad. It works for things that have a single essential property, but it also works for things that have multiple essential properties.
