

Flower Structure and Reproduction

Flowers of a plant are the reproductive structures. They are the part of the plant that produce seeds. The parts of a flower are: sepals, petals, stamens and carpels.

The sepals are the green protective structures. They are the part of the flower that protect the petals. The petals are the colorful structures. They are the part of the flower that attract pollinators.

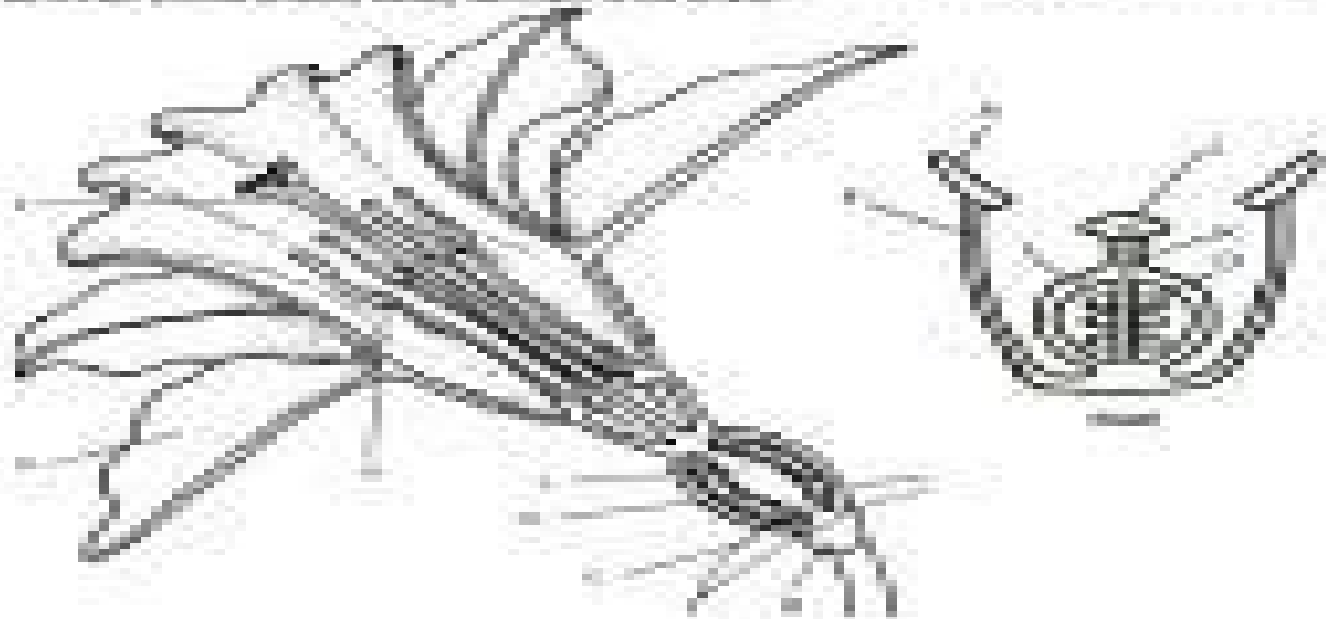

The stamens are the male reproductive structures. They consist of the anther and the filament. The anther is the part of the stamen that produces pollen. The filament is the part of the stamen that supports the anther.

The carpels are the female reproductive structures. They consist of the ovary and the style. The ovary is the part of the carpel that produces eggs. The style is the part of the carpel that supports the ovary.

The flower structure is important for the reproduction of a plant. The flower structure determines how a plant reproduces. It also determines how a plant attracts pollinators.
