

Shocking savouries!

Halloween food fun isn't all about cakes and sweet treats – there are brilliantly gruesome ways you can present main course and snack dishes too...

When we start planning special party food, we tend to think about the cakes first. Cakes are often the showstopper part of celebration food, but for a Halloween party there is just so much you can do with ordinary savoury food and a little bit of creativity.

For young children you don't even need to create any special food at all – just rebrand dishes they already love and their imagination will do the rest! Write a large paper menu to go on the table – you can even make it into a scroll for them to open – and give favourite food some Halloween names. So, spaghetti in tomato sauce can go on the menu as Wiggly Worms in Frog's Blood, while carrot sticks and hummus can be rebranded as Witch's Fingers and Slag Slime! It's a great way to give kids a range of normal healthy foods rather than just shop-bought party junk, yet they'll be thrilled by it. And, of course, older children can join in the fun of choosing the new food names and writing the menu.

For even more fun, you can easily give your menu an aged, parchment effect by dipping your blank paper in tea then letting it dry. You'll find lots of video tutorials on YouTube showing you how to this.

Don't forget drinks, too. Put water or lemonade into a large clear glass jug, then when the children are sat at the table, tell them you're going to create a potion for them to drink, and pour a little blue or green food colouring into the jug. Their eyes will be as big as saucers as they watch the colour slowly curl down and spread out through the clear liquid!

FUN THEMED FOOD

For tweens, teens and adults it's fun to create food that has more visual impact. Author Beth Jackson Klosterboer has thrown many Halloween parties for which she's had enormous fun creating special themed food, and now she shares her ideas in her book, Hungry Halloween, and her blog.

Above: Beth's Mummy Lasagne and Mischiefy Spicy Witch Dip have as much visual impact, yet both dishes are really simple – and fun – to create

Hungry Happenings. Pizza is one of the easiest dishes to give a Halloween twist to, as you can arrange things on the surface to create any image you like. Get great details with strips of red pepper, olives, chopped up mushrooms and more.

Pasta is versatile too, especially strips of lasagne for a mummy's or zombie's bandages! And a tray of dip can have other colours of dip layered on top to create an image, such as Beth's witch idea (top left). Why not pick a theme such as Beth's Eye party (pictured below) and run with it – your guests are guaranteed to love it! www.hungryhappenings.com
