

Hammurabi's Code: Was It Just?

Over 3,800 years after the world's oldest written laws were written by Hammurabi ("The Good and Right") in Mesopotamia (modern-day Iraq) around 1750 B.C., Hammurabi's Code continues to inspire and inform the world. It was the first written code of laws, and it was the first to be written in a single place. It was the first to be written in a single place, and it was the first to be written in a single place. It was the first to be written in a single place, and it was the first to be written in a single place. It was the first to be written in a single place, and it was the first to be written in a single place.
