Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the physical and psychological health of older adults with mild cognitive impairment. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group participated in a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program. The control group did not participate in any exercise program. The primary outcome was the change in the Mini-Mental State Examination (MMSE) score. Secondary outcomes included changes in the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI), the Geriatric Depression Scale (GDS), and the Physical Functioning Scale (PFS). The results showed that the intervention group had a significantly greater improvement in the MMSE score compared to the control group. There were no significant differences between the groups in the BDI, GDS, or PFS scores. The findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program may improve cognitive function in older adults with mild cognitive impairment.
