4 pages | 857 words

When a man is confronted by evil, fear, and injustice he will show the hero that he really is or run away like a faceless coward. Throughout the story there are many ways to characterize John Proctor. The three biggest are his selfishness; that was discovered in the beginning of the story, his internal conflicts; which lasted through the middle of the story all the way to nearly the end of the story, and his selflessness; which emerged in the end of the story. When one puts his personal desires ahead of his family, he destroys everything he has. Although John Proctor is an honorable man, he has a fatal flaw: his selfishness. John Proctor had no thought regarding his own family. There are many people in the world who wish they had families, or once had families, others have families and that is all that they need, and then there are people like John Proctor who have families and want more; his bodily wants transformed his soul into something he never wanted to be. John Proctor committed the crime of adultery. John Proctor once lusted in Abigail, proof of this is throughout the story but is first mentioned in a conversation between Abigail and John Proctor, first Abigail states, "I have a sense for heat, John, and your has drawn me up to your window, and I have seen you looking up burning in your loneliness. Do you tell me you have never looked up at my window?" (Abigail, Miller, I, 1031) To which John replies, "I may have looked up." (Proctor, Miller, I, 1031) This is the first confession of John's adultery. John Proctor's selfishness had left him weak, a weakness of fearing being discovered a lecher. For a long time he knows people are being accused, but he does nothing. He is afraid if he confronts the court with the truth about Abigail, that she might charge him with lechery. John Proctor's selfishness will leave him conflicted and unknowing about his next decision. John proctor's internal conflicts drive him to a point of desperation; in which he denounces his own faith. John's conflicts have left him weaker than that he was before, and that weakness makes him depend on Mary Warren to reveal the truth about the witch trials in his place. Mary Warren would then accuse John Proctor of witchcraft. John is thrown into a dungeon and he is in a dilemma whether he should hang like a "saint", or live with the guilt. In a conversation between Elizabeth and John Proctor, his inner struggle is shown, after Elizabeth says that she cannot judge him, "Then who will judge me? God in Heaven, what is John Proctor? I think it is honest, I think so; I am no saint. Let Rebecca go like a saint for me it is fraud!" (Proctor, Miller, IIII, 1100) Elizabeth then replies that she is not his judge, and to do as he will, to which John states, "Would you give them such a lie? Say it. Would you ever give them this? You would not if tongs of fire were..."

Understanding The Crucible, Claudia Durst Johnson, Vernon Johnson, 1998-09-17. Ideal for student research and class discussion, this interdisciplinary casebook provides a rich variety of primary historical documents and commentary on The Crucible within the context of two relevant historical periods: the Salem witch trials of 1692 and the Red Scare of the 1950s when the play was written. The play is a testimony to the inherent dangers Miller sees in any community seized by hysteria: the Salem witch hunts which Miller uses to illustrate such a community were echoed more than 250 years later in the hunt for subversives during the Red Scare of the 1950s. The authors provide literary and dramatic analysis of the play, comprehensive historical backgrounds, relevant documents of the periods, and questions and projects to help students in their understanding of The Crucible and the issues it raises. In a discussion of Puritan society of the seventeenth century, the authors explore the habits of many of the residents of Massachusetts Bay and specific events which seemed to make the witch hunts of 1692 inevitable. The text of relevant documents illustrate their beliefs combined with the disasters that contributed to community hysteria A chapter on the Salem witch trials includes testimony letters and first person accounts by actual people on which Miller based his characters A chapter on the Red Scare of the 1950s features testimony before the House Un American Activities Committee case studies of blacklisted people and an exclusive interview with a couple who were blacklisted The authors include a chapter on witch hunting in the 1990s in the form of testimony from preschoolers which sent child care workers to prison on charges of sexual abuse Students will be able to compare and contrast witch hunting over 300 years with the materials provided here many of which are available in no other printed form Each section of the casebook contains study questions topics for research papers and class discussion and lists of further reading for examining the issues raised by the play
