

John Muir Study Guide
Science Lesson Plan
Grade Four
Unique Ecosystems

John Muir traveled throughout the world, and every place he visited he saw plants and animal species that could naturally be found nowhere else. One of his favorite ecosystems was that of the Giant Sequoia tree which grows only in southern Sierra mountains of California where the soil and climate are ideal for this species of tree. Muir recognized that the combination of weather, climate, soil, and available water are important factors in determining whether a particular plant or animal species can survive in an area.

In each place John Muir visited he learned about the plants and animals that live in the region, and how they have adapted to their environment.

Objective:

Students will be able to explain how in any particular environment, some kinds of plants and animals survive well, some survive less well, and some cannot survive at all.

California Science Standard Grade Four, Life Sciences:

- 3a. Students know ecosystems can be characterized by their living and nonliving components.
- 3b. Students know that in any particular environment, some kinds of plants and animals survive well, some survive less well, and some cannot survive at all.
