

Choices: Exploring Parts of Speech

The following activities challenge you to find a connection between parts of speech and the world around you. Do the activity below that suits your personality best, and then share your discoveries with your class.

BUILDING BACKGROUND KNOWLEDGE

Pen, Jot, and Scribble

What are the synonyms for the verb write? Use a thesaurus to get started on a list. Include slang words, jargon, and any other type of synonym that you can. Then, write a sentence or two identifying the connotations of each word. For instance, jot refers to short, quick, informal notes. You could create a handout for your classmates, or you could draw illustrations of a group of synonyms and hang your pictures in the classroom.

LINGUISTICS

What's New?

In the last hundred years, many words have been added to English. Words from science, psychology, art, and technology have become common knowledge. Choose a field and investigate ten new words. Find out when they were first used. (Check the Oxford English Dictionary.) Then, create a time line. The class may be using your time line throughout the year, so use large paper and leave room for additions. Post your words, along with their meanings and illustrations, on the time line.

HISTORY

Who's Who

The study of grammar started a long time ago. How long ago? Find out. While you're at it, find out some of the all-time great names in grammar. Start with Dionysius Thrax. What did he do that is so important? When you've completed your research, write up some short notes and post them on a time line. You might want to label each name as a compound noun.

STATISTICS

The Bottom Line

Statistically speaking, which part of speech appears most often in advertisements, stories, poems, legal contracts, instructions, cookbooks, and other types of writing? Do a survey of several representative passages. Identify and tabulate each part of speech in each passage. Then, compare the passages. A computer spreadsheet could make creating a graphic presentation of your results short work. Be sure to print out copies for all your classmates. Lead a discussion to determine why certain parts of speech may or may not figure more predominantly in certain types of writings.

COMPUTER PRESENTATION

To Learn Something, Teach It.

Help younger students understand the parts of speech. Create an electronic slide show introducing the parts of speech. You could include illustrations, voice-over, sound effects, and anything else that you think would engage younger students. Take your presentation to an elementary or middle school classroom and see what they think! Oh, you might also want to write a short test to check your effectiveness.

CREATIVE WRITING

What, That, and Who, Too

If Abbott and Costello can make comedy history by making jokes like their famous "Who's on First?" comedy routine based on the parts of speech, why can't you? Give it a try. Write a comedy dialogue or monologue that is based on pronouns. With your teacher's permission, present your routine to the class.
