

FUSION

Assessment Guide

1. The first step in the fusion process is to identify the components of the system. This involves a thorough analysis of the system's architecture and the data it processes. Once the components are identified, the next step is to determine the relationships between them. This is done by creating a data flow diagram that shows how data is passed between different parts of the system. Finally, the system is tested to ensure that all components are working correctly and that the data flow is as expected.

2. The second step in the fusion process is to integrate the data from the different components. This is done by creating a data integration layer that acts as a bridge between the different data sources. This layer is responsible for ensuring that the data from all sources is consistent and that it is being processed in a way that makes sense. Once the data is integrated, the next step is to analyze it to identify any patterns or trends. This is done using a variety of data analysis techniques, including statistical analysis and machine learning.
