

Study Questions on John Updike's "A & P" (1961)

This story is narrated in the first person by Sammy, who is also the protagonist. How well does he function as the narrator of his own story? What kind of style does he use? What gives his narration the feeling of immediacy? Nearly all of the story is presented in the present tense, which is fairly unusual. Does this narrative strategy work for you?

What kind of person is Sammy? How old is he? How does he feel about his job? about adults in general? about his home town? about the typical shoppers he serves in the A & P supermarket?

What do his lengthy and detailed descriptions of the three girls suggest about Sammy? Why is the third girl "queeny"? Do his facile generalizations about women invite us to dismiss him as a sexist, or is there more to him than this?

What do the shoppers and other employees' reactions to the three girls tell us about the particular slice of society represented in this supermarket? (The A & P would be roughly comparable to a Walmart today.) The three girls are clearly not part of this microcosm of Americana. What part of society are they from? Do Sammy's reactions align him more with the world of the A & P or with the girls? Do his feelings toward the girls undergo a change during the story?

What is the function of Lengel in the story? Compare and contrast Sammy with fellow checker Stokesie. Which one is more like Lengel?

What is the story's climax? Why does Sammy quit his job? How well is it handled by the author? What does Sammy gain from quitting? Does he gain more than he loses? Note his own assessment: "I don't think it's so sad myself." Do you agree with him that "once you beg in a gesture it's fatal not to go through with it"? What are the implications of Sammy's seeing "Lengel at my place in the slot checking the sheep through"? Expecting to see the three girls outside the market after his defiant gesture, what does he find instead?

What is the tone of the last two paragraphs of the story, especially the final line ("... my stomach kind of fell as I felt how hard the world was going to be to me hereafter")? What has Sammy learned from this experience?
