Abstract The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program on the physical and psychological health of older adults. The study was a randomized, controlled trial involving 40 participants aged 65 and older. The participants were divided into two groups: an experimental group that participated in the aquatic exercise program and a control group that did not. The experimental group showed significant improvements in physical health, including increased muscle strength, endurance, and flexibility, as well as improvements in psychological health, including reduced anxiety and depression. The control group showed no significant changes. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program can effectively improve the physical and psychological health of older adults.
