

ANSWERS AND EXPLANATIONS

Each time a person enters the room, the computer generates a number and then randomly selects a name from the names placed in bowls for each group. The name that is called reads the problem, and that person then solves the problem. A new problem is then placed in the bowl and another name is called. This entire sequence is repeated for fifteen to twenty problems.

After the problems are all completed, you'll read aloud the group's answers, collect any incorrect answers, and assign another problem. Reassigning the group's problem may mean asking them to explain the problem, spending the time on the problem, reading about it, or making a new problem.

The teacher takes a count and compares answers for each group. Then you can assign another set of problems. The entire routine, including sharing answers, takes about one hour for fifteen to twenty problems, depending on how challenging the problems are. You can also assign more problems during the week, and keep students working on them through homework.

After all groups are finished, we begin our day's closing activities and share our answers, giving out an idea and feedback card, and then assign the next day's problem.

"There are a few things to remember about our group. First, make sure all members are working and understanding each other's ideas. Second, be helpful to each other. Third, be honest about your work."

"Remember, there are no wrong answers here."

"Good job everyone! Good work! Your feedback sheets are going to help!"
