Implementation of the National Incident Management System (NIMS) and the Incident Command System (ICS) During Response and Recovery Operations William L. Carwile,United States. Department of Homeland Security. Federal Emergency Management Agency,2011 As FEMA continues supporting the governors of the states impacted by the unprecedented tornadoes and flooding along the Mississippi River and its tributaries with their ongoing response recovery and mitigation efforts additional counties are still being added within the declared states Substantial FEMA resources are now rapidly flowing into the impacted states and we are compiling recovery estimates In 95 percent of declared disaster responses we utilize the traditional FEMA functional organization model employing the Federal Coordinating Officer FCO appropriate Command and General Staff and program leads to cover a few counties and a limited geographic area In smaller disaster responses such as these decisions can be made at the Joint Field Office JFO level in a centralized manner and this can result in a workable approach However for large scale events that include many counties parishes or other jurisdictions covering an extensive geographic area the Unified Coordination Group UCG must actively consider adopting an expanded ICS compliant

organizational structure that provides for more distributed decision making and coordination Adhering to the ICS organizational structure when expanding to meet operational needs not only facilitates unity of effort but helps ensure an appropriate span of control ratio Also while County Liaisons can be a valued addition to the team for providing real time situational awareness they are not part of the ICS structure nor are they responsible for working with county officials to prioritize and account for federal recourses For successful outcomes it is critical that we ensure unity of effort in our operations and avoid creating stove piped or ad hoc field operations that JFO program leads attempt to manage in a centralized manner To achieve the greatest success an ICS compliant organizational structure requires the following 1 FCO support 2 Knowledgeable Operations Section Chiefs Branch Directors and Division Supervisors 3 An appropriate subordinate structure with task forces and strike teams 4 A transparent complete and trusted partnership with state counterparts 5 Close working relationships with elected and appointed officials in each jurisdictional area 6 A disciplined approach by the program leads including Public Assistance Individual Assistance External Affairs and especially Community Relations in which division supervisors and geographical branch directors are kept informed of deployments of task forces or strike teams crews individuals or other personnel or resources to the geographical areas of responsibility and 7 An effective Incident Action Plan that sets forth achievable objectives reflects clear work assignments and provides contact information for all deployed personnel In addition to providing a workable span of control and promoting unity of effort when implemented adhering to this organizational structure will help ensure that a FEMA leader has knowledge of all FEMA personnel operating in a defined area A single point of contact reporting through defined channels to the FCO ensures accountability for all FEMA personnel as well as those from other federal agencies which is critical when working in remote or complicated environments
