Drug Sponsor's Discovery and Screening Phase

Drug Developed

Animals Tested

IND Application

The sponsor submits an Investigational New Drug (IND) application to FDA based on the results from testing that includes the drug's composition and manufacturing, and develops a plan for testing the drug on humans.

IND REVIEW

FDA reviews the IND to ensure the proposed studies generally adhere to ethical rules. A new placebo may be administered only if there is a substantial risk that there are adverse effects on patients and human subject protection.

CLINICAL

Drug Sponsor's Clinical Studies/Trials

3

PHASE 1

20-80

The typical number of healthy volunteers used in Phase 1; this phase emphasizes safety. The goal here in this phase is to determine what the drug's most frequent side effects are and, often, how the drug is metabolized and excreted.

4

PHASE 2

100's

The typical number of patients used in Phase 2; this phase emphasizes effectiveness. The goal is to obtain preliminary data on whether the drug works in people who have a certain disease or condition. For controlled study, patients receiving the drug are compared with similar patients receiving a different treatment, usually a placebo or a different drug. Safety continues to be evaluated, and short-term side effects are studied.

At the end of Phase 1, FDA and sponsor discuss how large-scale studies in Phase 2 will be done.

5

PHASE 3

1000's

The typical number of patients used in Phase 3. These studies gather more information about safety and effectiveness, study different populations and different dosages, and use the drug in combination with other drugs.

FDA's Center for Drug Evaluation and Research (CDER) evaluates new drugs before they can be sold.

The current evaluation and only patients using drugs feel the possible benefits and patients are informed they need to use medicines wisely. CDER reviews that drugs, both food and drugs, are effective and they have health benefits enough that it's worth it.
