

Clary: The Whole Bloody Circle & Discussion Questions

However, as discussed below, these features are more of a consequence of the historical situation and gendered assumptions about femininity than of any inherent female qualities.

Clary herself finds the sort of society most appropriate for women should be created in light of the three features that make her world best equipped for the particular sort of society that women are suited to. The development of Clary's

1. Clary herself believes that women should have a right to participate in society and should be treated the same as men serving their interests equally in serving the world, that is, that women should participate in society.
