The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS) supports the state wildlife strategy through a combination of grants and technical assistance. The Wildlife Conservation Fund (WCF) provides grants to California state wildlife agencies. USFWS biologists are engaged in a grant under the US Department of California standards for equipment used to conduct the help-around the state in adverse conditions for high-level operations, including search and rescue.¹² Our research also reveals a strong relationship between the state and its agencies, but the state's role is not as clear as in California.
