Recommendations

Given [NAME]'s sensory needs, [NAME] would benefit from direct support from an occupational therapist. [NAME] may benefit from specific sensory regulation tools to help them get to a state of readiness for activities.

Goals will specifically focus on the development of the following:

- Increasing sensory experiences that lead participation in daily activities (for students presenting as "seeking" more than others on sensory profile).
- Reducing unwanted patterns of sensory experiences to increase participation in daily activities (for students presenting as "avoiding" more than others on sensory profile).
- Increasing intensity of sensory experiences in daily activities.

Sensory regulation tools

Sensory regulation tools are used to assist children to get to a "state of readiness" for an activity. These are essentially a combination of sensory experiences and movement activities that can be used in the classroom, at home, at school and out in the community. Sensory regulation tools can be used therapeutically to support engagement and learning as well as a preventative to minimize behavior challenges when it is known that there may be unavoidable trigger(s) in the environment or certain times of day that are more likely to become dysregulated.

Sensory regulation also includes self-management i.e., using something active and sensory to help with self-management of regulation through the prefrontal brain (planning/choice making) before when we are
