Getting Results the Agile Way

A Personal Results System for Work and Life

How to focus, and prioritize, manage time and information, and unleash the power of balance and flexibility for meaningful results

J.D. MEYER

An agile life is one that can easily respond to change. Where you're not overly constrained by rigid planning, but can rather adapt and get things done in a way that fits your goals and the constant randomness of life.

Don't set static rigid goals, keep testing and adjusting as you go.

Always have a bias for action.

Don't focus on just burning down your backlog, focus on how much value you can create. Sometimes the backlog is best left unfinished.

Don't keep trying to fix your weaknesses, play to your strengths instead.

Time management is less important than energy management. Spend your best energy on your most important work, and everything else will follow.

The key isn't to have some huge long term plan, but to rather know the next vital few things you need to do to hit the goal you want to accomplish.

Don't base your day on what you didn't get done in the past. Base it on what you want to accomplish now, what will have the biggest impact now.

Set a weekly reflection for what went well, what didn't, what you got done, what you want to do in the future.
