Distribution of Resources in the Nigerian Health Care System Anthony Okechukwu Nnadi, 2020-01-09 This publication representing the doctoral dissertation of Rev Fr Anthony Okechukwu Nnadi examines the healthcare system in Nigeria in the light of the Catholic social teaching He supports that the allocation of health care resources is not only a matter of organization but is also an ethical problem The debacles and failure of the Nigerian health system result from many factors including lack of will to implement the right policies on the ground corruption among the leaders lack of justice lack of respect for the dignity of each human person mismanagement and insufficient consideration and application of ethical principles in the administration of common good especially in the distribution of health care and social resources For the distribution of health care resources this doctoral dissertation suggests that priority be given to the basic health care needs of Nigerian citizens especially those who have no means of satisfying these needs themselves In this context the research affirms that great attention needs to be paid to ensuring that the principle of human dignity is completely respected in each and every policy in this important area This doctoral thesis is an ethical vision of social reality in Nigeria It proposes the person centred Catholic principles as a possible way forward in the distribution of health care resources in Nigeria It does not imply substituting the economic political and health care experts in offering technical solutions in their areas of competence The author is convinced that healthcare allocation is also an ethical issue that needs to be governed by ethical principles The key factors for choosing this theme are based on the author s knowledge of the deplorable condition of the health care system in Nigeria and his desire to save human lives Rev Fr Anthony Okechukwu Nnadi believes that we are all stewards of human life This implies a moral obligation to protect the dignity of the human person which is inseparable from protecting human life

Strengthening and harmonizing food policy systems to achieve food security Babu, Suresh Chandra, Blom, Sylvia, 2017-02-15 Understanding how various entities in a policy system at the national level can contribute to improved use of evidence in policy making Yet little research has focused in developing countries on how various actors and players in a policy system work together to achieve a set of policy goals In this paper we study the factors contributing to the effectiveness of a policy system The process of policy design adoption implementation and refinement requires an effective policy system as well as a capacitated and supportive institutional structure External actors both through technical and financial assistance often support policy systems in developing countries Poor coordination and harmonization of such assistance among various actors and players within the country can often result in undermining the very policy systems they try to strengthen This is typical in the African agricultural development process In this paper we develop a conceptual framework for understanding the policy and institutional architecture of food and agriculture policy system and for improving the coordination and harmonization of the roles of policy actors and players Applying the framework to Ghana we map and analyze the organizational contributions of various actors and their functional characteristics We show how such analysis can aid various policy actors in setting priorities and strategies for increasing their capacity and the effectiveness of their roles Finally we draw lessons for strengthening the food policy systems in developing countries through effective coordination among local and external actors
