

The Transactional Model of Communication: An Equation

They're both positively welcoming the communication, they're both consenting artisans in the communication, and making predictions on the appearance of the approaching communication, they've both got positive expectations of the outcome. The conversation begins with Person A saying, "Hello, I'm Aaron". Person B replies, "Hi, I'm Betray". They both smile to each other, but Aaron loses eye contact and looks up and down quickly at Botany's figure. Betray predicts that Aaron is judging her outer appearance which could convey that Aaron may be judgmental in general or a misogynist that doesn't respect her.

These are variables. These, along with other rabbles, determine the outcome of the session of communication. The personality variables will be put into brackets [suggesting the most likely possibilities of the individual. Within these personality variables, there is always the hidden variable within, leaving the possibility open for an unmentioned or less-likely personality option such as mental illness. This assumptive variable will be labeled as ((X)). A# [Judgmental? Misogynistic? Socially X)?] B# [Femaleness? Overly-sensitive? Accurately Observant?

The equation has changed because Betray is no longer positively viewing this communication, she costive outcome. [A#] Aaron doesn't detect that Betray is now uncomfortable, so he is still undoubted his positive outcome. Betray is no longer so positive after her first impression of Aaron. Betray asks Aaron half-heartedly about the quality of his day. Aaron, unaware of Betrays perception, answers cordially with: "My day has been pretty good, and yours? " Judging by Aaron's casual and cordial response, he conveys that he would most likely welcome a similar response.

Betray does not meet Aaron's expectations and she replies by saying, "It was alright earlier, but then I went to get my hair done ND it went by really slow 'cause I didn't have any good magazines to read". Aaron is unimpressed and somewhat deflated after realizing that the woman that he may have predicted as 'intelligent' has proven otherwise. By Betray breaking one of Aaron's implicit social rules of replying with courtesy and simplicity, he has now made predictions about Betrays personality.

He considers that she may be immature, air-headed, or simply uninteresting, and of course the hidden possibility (X). Aaron makes the predictions about Betray, and he now has a negative view on the communication. Betray on the other hand simply appreciates the few seconds that Aaron listened and this new impression has made up for the previous one. Betray once again positively views the communication. A# Judgmental? Misogynistic? Narcissistic? And/or (X)] (Aaron's prediction) (Betrays prediction) B# [Feminist? Overly-sensitive? Accurately observant? Air-headed?
