

FIVE WOMEN WEARING THE SAME DRESS

ACT ONE

The play takes place in Meredith's bedroom, a large, comfortable room on the second floor of a renovated town-of-the-century mansion in a stylish, old-money suburb of Knoxville, Tennessee. There is a big brass bed, two large dressers, a vanity with a mirror. A compact shelf stereo system with CD player. A portable iron-clubbing exercise machine. A large walk-in closet. A door leads to a bathroom; another to the hall. A large window with a window seat is suggested downstairs.

The room has been decorated by Meredith's mother in a cluttered, eclectic combination of light Victorian and contemporary, mixing antiques and rich, deeply-hued linens of wall paper with stark white custom shelving and high-tech lighting. A plush Persian rug covers the hardwood floor. Pillows abound. The effect is beautiful and inviting, not quite luxurious but definitely comfortable — it is clear this home is inhabited by the wealthy. The air of traditional privilege is disrupted, however, by a prominent poster of Malcolm X on the wall.

Underlining the entire scene is an atmosphere of age and durability, conveyed by the original architectural details that remain: huge, multi-paned windows, exquisite molding, the sheer height of the ceiling. There is history in this room.

It is shortly after noon on a day in summer.

A few moments of silence, then someone knocks softly at the door.

FRANCES. (Off) No-one. (After a moment the knock is repeated, slightly louder. Off) Anybody home? (A long pause, then the door opens slowly and Frances peers around it.) Meredith? (Frances is a stout-faced woman, twenty-one years old. She wears an expensive, off-the-shoulder bridesmaid's gown with a voluminous skirt, its pouch or full or one of those horrible wedding pants. She also wears an elaborate hat that matches her dress and she carries a bouquet. She enters the room tentatively and shuts the door behind her, moving stiffly in her dress, as if it intimidates her, which it does. She opens a jewelry box on top of the vanity, crosses to it, opens it and inspects its contents.) Oh, my. (She pulls out a glittering diamond bracelet. Handling it carefully, almost reverently, she pins it on her wrist and fastens it. Holding out her arm, she admires the bracelet in the mirror, murmuring a series of pious the coos that is her glossolalia.)

MEREDITH. (Off) Mother, I am just going upstairs — (A telephone somewhere in the room begins to ring. Off) I am not answering that. (Alarmed, Frances struggles with the bracelet, vainly attempting to unfasten it. Meredith can be heard clomping up the stairs. Off) No ma'am, I am not answering that. You will not get to see this way. (As Meredith goes down, Frances fumes. Unable to unfasten the diamond bracelet, she looks around the room for a place to hide. She scurries under the bed just as Meredith thrusts open the door and enters. Meredith is twenty-two years old. Athletic. Under a black leather motorcycle jacket she wears a dress identical to the one Frances wears; she seems horrified of it. She is also wearing a similar hat and carrying a bouquet. She has a leather backpack slung over one shoulder and sports a pair of sinister-looking sunglasses. She closes the door behind her and looks at, stares at the still-ringing telephone, frowns and picks up the receiver.) Mother, what? I am just dropping off my stuff. No ma'am, this room is off limits to you ladies. Mother. Bye-bye. Bye-bye. (She hangs up the receiver, then kicks off a pair of pumps and to watch her dress, throws the bouquet and the backpack on the bed and crosses directly to the vanity. She grabs the jewelry box and digs through it.) What? (She checks the surface of the vanity furiously.) I can't believe that (She crosses to the bed, pulls up the bedspread and then gets down on her hands and knees and reaches under the bed. Crying out.) Who is that?

6

FRANCES. (From under bed.) Oh, it's just me. (Frances emerges sheepishly from under the bed, keeping the bracelet on her wrist hidden behind her back. Smally.) Hi, there.

MEREDITH. Frances, what the hell are you doing?

FRANCES. Oh, well, there aren't too many people downstairs, and nobody I really know too well, aside from Mama and Daddy and Uncle Rover and Aunt Dotty, so ... I guess I'm just looking for a friendly face. (A nervous laugh.)

MEREDITH. Under my bed?

FRANCES. No, I — well, when I heard you coming in, I got scared, I realized I really shouldn't be here. I tried to hide from you, Meredith. I hope you can forgive me.

MEREDITH. (Staring at her.) Well, sure. (She pulls a white cloth from underneath the bed and dips through it.)

FRANCES. (Struggles with the bracelet behind her back.) It's just that this room is so beautiful. I remember whenever we came to visit when I was little, and Tracy still lived in here? You and her and all the other cousins would be having tea parties in her playhouse out back, but I would sneak up here and sit in the middle of this room and pretend it was mine. Of course, I just worshipped her, Tracy.

MEREDITH. You and everybody else. Herself included.

FRANCES. That's why I was so thrilled to be in her wedding. (Meredith, unable to find what she was looking for in the white cloth, thrusts it back under the bed and groans in frustration.)

MEREDITH. Where the hell is it?

FRANCES. (Nervously.) What are you looking for?

MEREDITH. Have you noticed how calm she is today? How usual? She has been a nervous wreck for weeks. She had to be high. (Catches sight of herself in the mirror.) Oh, lord. (Takes off her hat.) And then she has the gall to make me wear these horrible — things on our heads, so we all look like the flying nun —

FRANCES. I like this hat.

MEREDITH. Are you serious? Look at yourself in the mirror, Frances, you look ridiculous.

FRANCES. Well —

MEREDITH. You look like a lump. At least you can wear this dress, though. Makes me look like a backbreaker. (Meredith observes herself critically in the mirror, frowns, and gets a pack of cigarettes out of her backpack.) You want one?

FRANCES. No, thanks. I don't smoke. I'm a Christian.

MEREDITH. (Digging through her backpack.) Of course, wouldn't you know it? Now I can't find any matches. (She goes into the bathroom, where she can be heard continuing her search. Frances works furiously to get the bracelet off her wrist.) I mean, okay, I can certainly understand why Tracy would want to be married today, just to get through this ordeal. But she could have at least asked. I mean, she just took it! Typical. (Frances finally gets the bracelet unfastened and slips it back into the jewelry box, greatly relieved.)

FRANCES. (Has heard her leave.) Then shall not cover.

MEREDITH. (In bathroom.) And then all that stuff about obedience, everybody was acting so serious, I was like, Tracy? Okay. So? She already knew that poor boy's life. I mean, what a joke! Tracy, the blushing bride. Knew me while I had. (Cries out.) Oh, my God!

FRANCES. (Reenters.) What? (Meredith enters from the bathroom
