practices of the major Eurasian societies throughout history ranging from Ancient Egypt Imperial Rome and medieval China to early modern Europe in which he relates the differences in food preparation and consumption emerging in these societies to differences in their socio economic structures specifically in modes of production and communication He concludes with an examination of the world wide rise of industrial food and its impact on Third World societies showing that the ability of the latter to resist cultural domination in food as in other things is related to the nature of their pre existing socio economic structures The arguments presented here will interest all social scientists and historians concerned with cultural history and social theory
