

Analysis of 'Sonnet 130' [45 mins]

1. Introduction

In the last lesson, you learnt about a type of poem called a sonnet. Shakespearean sonnets, like Sonnet 130, have a very particular structure and often deal with themes like love. You also read Sonnet 130 and learnt how it is a twist on a conventional love poem. As you read, the poem uses hyperbole to criticise his beloved's appearance, making fun of love poems that excessively flatter their subject.

In this lesson, you will analyse Sonnet 130 in more depth. You will unpack each line of the poem, breaking down the poetic devices and the deeper meaning that unfolds. By the end of this lesson, you will be able to: Analyse language structures and poetic devices, and how they relate to the meaning of Sonnet 130.

2. Analysis

Let's look at a line-by-line analysis of the poem.

2.1 First quatrain

Sonnet 130: My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun Lines 1 - 4

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;
Coral is far more red than her lips' red;
If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun;
If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.

Line 1 is an unexpected and strange way to start a love poem, don't you think? The speaker says that his mistress's eyes do not shine bright and beautifully like the sun, which is a simile comparing her eyes to the sun – which has quite a negative slant to it. He could have said 'not like the sun', but he uses the word 'nothing', which emphasises just how unlike the sun her eyes are. The first word we read is 'my', which forms an alliterative pattern with the following word 'mistress', drawing the reader's attention to the fact that it is his mistress as opposed to everyone else's mistress, thereby setting her up for the various comparisons to the others that follow. We also have to wonder who he is addressing. Is it the reader or is he speaking to other sonneteers?

Line 2 compares the colour of the mistress's lips to coral (meaning marine coral) out of which polished jewellery was fashioned at that time. Bright red lips were considered ideal for a beautiful woman, but the red of the mistress's lips does not compare.

Line 3 finds the colour of her breasts falling short of the beauty standard: snowy white. Instead, it is a sort of greyish brown colour called dun, a colour mostly used to describe horses.

Line 4 compares hairs to wires and states that the mistress's 'wires' are black as opposed to the golden hue that was considered attractive at that time. It is interesting to note that wires may be a reference to period headdresses made of gold wire that blended in well with golden hair and which drew favourable comparisons.

Overall, the first quatrain employs imagery taken from nature to enable the reader to 'see' what his mistress looks like and also what she does not look like. The words sun, snow, white, dun, wires and black wires all help to paint this picture. The use of imagery continues in the next stanza.
