Endocrine System and Endocrine Regulation

Background

The endocrine system has specialized networks of glands, hormones and receptors. Together, the two components send distinct but sometimes shared messages and broadly influence the way organisms respond to environmental and internal cues.

Generally, all organisms have either one or, more often, more systems controlling and coordinating the processes within the body.

1. The endocrine system, which uses the signal passed to a target via release of chemical signals passing through the network for particular signals or events.
2. The nervous system, which is a more sophisticated and directed communication system, which is concerned with the stimulus-response system, which can react to the signal within body.

The nervous system reacts to stimuli with the endocrine system to control all body functions and processes.

Two hormones become involved in the system: one hormone is the hormone (hormone) and the other is the hormone (hormone).
