The authors argue that homeworking replicates wider divisions in the labour force and that its potential for improving women's employment opportunities is therefore limited. Using original research they outline the advantages and disadvantages, the pay and conditions and the family situations for contemporary women homeworkers. Gender, class, racism and ethnicity are shown to be key factors in constructing the homeworking labour force. The authors acknowledge the shared position that homeworkers occupy as women as well as the differences experienced by clerical, manufacturing and professional homeworkers and question whether new technology in itself can be the way forward to a better paid, less onerous form of homeworking. The Official Year Book of New South Wales, 1924
