Lesson 5: Major Language Teaching Methods

Definitions:

A methodology offers to the procedures and activities that are used to teach the content of a syllabus. A methodology includes teaching and testing. It is set of methods which are derived from two things:

A linguistic theory (a particular view of language)

A psychological theory (a particular view of learning)

A method has been defined in term of 3 levels which are inter dependent: Approach/ Design/ Procedure.

1- Deals with theories of language and language learning.

2- Shows the relationship between theories of language and theories of learning. This level affects the linguistic content, the selection and organization of the teaching material and the classroom activities, and the description of the role of the teaching and the learner. (It is a very important stage because we have to take decision on the design of lge.)

3- Deals with the techniques and practices in the classroom and this are called implementation.

So, an approach to L2 teaching will influence the design of a method which in turn will affect the procedure. All methods operate explicitly from an approach. (A teacher will be given a syllabus and a test book to follow, but nobody will tell him the principles of syllabus, what kind of topics, who designed the reading passages...So teacher have to select a method to transmit the teaching. For example: if the test book is based on a structural behaviorist view, the teacher has to follow a structural behaviorist method and student will follow the same for a communicative view.

For example the structural teaching method views language as a system of structurally related element that can be divided into small parts. It also views learning a language as the acquisition of new habits through stimulus -response conditioning.
