The Impact of Voluntary Pre-kindergarten on the Academic Achievement and Kindergarten Readiness of Students in a Large Suburban School District Jordan J. Rodriguez, 2013 Throughout the United States state governments are allocating millions of dollars to support Voluntary Pre Kindergarten VPK programs Recent research has indicated that students who participate in VPK demonstrate higher academic achievement scores across a number of subject areas Moreover VPK participants are more likely to enter primary school on grade level which in turn leads to a reduction in grade retention Studies have indicated that although all students who participate in VPK programs benefit from such programs minority students and students who come from low socioeconomic backgrounds benefit at an even higher level The intent of this study was to determine to what extent if any a VPK program within a large suburban school district impacted the academic achievement and kindergarten preparedness of participants in comparison to students who did not participate in the VPK program offered by the district To measure the impact student scores on the 2006 2007 Florida Kindergarten Readiness Screener FLKRS were compared through the use of an independent samples t test The same students had their 3rd grade Florida Comprehensive Assessment Test FCAT Reading and Mathematics scored compared as well Two groups were compared against one another The control group was a group of students who did not participate in the VPK offered by the school district The treatment group was the group of students that participated in the district offered VPK The results of each of the independent sample t tests conducted determined that there was not a statistically significant difference in either student preparedness or student academic achievement between the VPK participant group and the non participant group
