Service Bulletin, 1924    Comparative Patriarchy and American Institutions Francis Feeley, 2010-02-19 As Claude Lévi Strauss wrote in his book La pensée sauvage Paris 1960 biographical and anecdotal history is low powered history which is not intelligible in itself and only becomes so when it is transferred en bloc to a form of history of a higher power than itself. The historian's relative choice is always confined to the choice between history which teaches more and explains less and history which explains more and teaches less. This book oscillates between analysis which tries to explain what man is and anecdote which tries to teach what he is capable of becoming. What better approach to understanding patriarchy beyond learning the formal dictionary definitions of this term than by examining the richly diverse descriptions of gender relationships found in the following chapters? It is the hope of these authors that the recognition of national differences and gender differences will provide new vantage points from which we may gain wider perspectives on our own prejudices and thereby find fulfillment of our aspirations to become more fully human.

Congress. House. Committee on Small Business. Subcommittee on Commodities and Services, 1975    Consumers' Selves and Marketing Daniela Herzog, 2019-01-14 Consumers' self concept plays a key role in consumer behavior. Against this background this doctoral thesis is dedicated to the examination of important aspects related to consumers' self. In three papers Daniela Herzog studies consumers' self in the context of marketing from three different perspectives. In Paper 1 she provides a better understanding of the two types of consumers' self concepts actual and ideal self and how they are construed. In Paper 2 she examines how an activated ideal self i.e. ideal self congruence and its different facets e.g. related to status or friendship influence the perceptions of brands and consumers' emotions simultaneously. Finally in Paper 3 she studies how advertising that promotes the beauty of normality and challenges unrealistic beauty ideals impacts females' self discrepancy difference between the actual and ideal self emotions and brand perceptions. Conclusively this dissertation highlights consumers' self as a central multifaceted and complex phenomenon. The three papers improve our understanding of consumers' actual and ideal self and provide insights into how to target them. The dissertation also shows that both aspirational branding communicating with ideals and therapeutic advertising promoting the beauty of normality and challenging unrealistic and unattainable beauty ideals can have positive and negative effects on a consumer simultaneously a dual effect. These findings imply that managers and researchers need to be aware of such potential dual effects. In sum this dissertation generates implications for research in the context of consumers' self in marketing and consumer behavior. Furthermore this dissertation generates important implications for managers on how brands can most effectively target and activate consumers' selves on how to position brands which are congruent with consumers' ideals and on how to implement advertising strategies challenging unrealistic beauty ideals.
