

Table 2.3: The melting and boiling points for a number of substances

You will have seen that substances such as ethanol, with relatively weak intermolecular forces, have the lowest boiling point, while substances with stronger intermolecular forces such as sodium chloride and mercury, must be heated much more if the particles are to have enough energy to overcome the forces that are holding them together in the liquid. See the section (Section 2.5.1: Exercise: Forces and boiling point) below for a further exercise on boiling point.

3. Density and viscosity

NOTE: Density and viscosity is not in CAPS - Included for Completeness

Definition 2.5: Density

Density is a measure of the mass of a substance per unit volume.

The density of a solid is generally higher than that of a liquid because the particles are held much more closely together and therefore there are more particles packed together in a particular volume. In other words, there is a greater mass of the substance in a particular volume. In general, density increases as the strength of the intermolecular forces increases.

Definition 2.6: Viscosity

Viscosity is a measure of how resistant a liquid is to flowing (in other words, how easy it is to pour the liquid from one container to another).

Viscosity is also sometimes described as the 'thickness' of a fluid. Think for example of syrup and how slowly it pours from one container into another. Now compare this to how easy it is to pour water. The viscosity of syrup is greater than the viscosity of water. Once again, the stronger the intermolecular forces in the liquid, the greater its viscosity.

It should be clear now that we can explain a lot of the macroscopic properties of matter (i.e. the characteristics we can see or observe) by understanding their microscopic structure and the way in which the atoms and molecules that make up matter are held together.

2.5.1 Exercise: Forces and boiling point

The table below gives the molecular formula and the boiling point for a number of organic compounds called alkanes (more on these compounds in grade 12). Refer to the table and then answer the questions that follow.

Organic compound	Molecular formula	Boiling point ($^{\circ}C$)
Methane	CH_4	-161.6
Ethane	C_2H_6	- 88.6
Propane	C_3H_8	-45
Butane	C_4H_{10}	-0.5
Pentane	C_5H_{12}	36.1
Hexane	C_6H_{14}	69
Heptane	C_7H_{16}	98.42
Octane	C_8H_{18}	125.52
