Carbon Sinks and Climate Change Colin

A. G. Hunt,2009-01-01 The importance of this book lies in being one of the first comprehensive attempts to summarise major findings in the field of carbon sinks and climate change The book also deals comprehensively with the present and future role of forests in climate change policy and practice This timely book is essential reading for policy decision makers and foresters alike Wasantha Athukorala Economic Analysis and Policy Reforestation and avoiding deforestation are methods of harnessing nature to tackle global warming the greatest challenge facing humankind In this book Colin Hunt deals comprehensively with the present and future role of forests in climate change policy and practice The author provides signposts for the way ahead in climate change policy and offers practical examples of forestry s role in climate change mitigation in both developed and tropical developing countries Chapters on measuring carbon in plantations their biodiversity benefits and potential for biofuel production complement the analysis He also discusses the potential for forestry in climate change policy in the United States and other countries where policies to limit greenhouse gas emissions have been foreshadowed The author employs scientific and socio economic analysis and lays bare the complexity of forestry markets A review of the workings of carbon markets based both on the Kyoto Protocol and voluntary participation provides a foundation from which to explore forestry s role Emphasis is placed on acknowledging how forests idiosyncrasies affect the design of markets for sequestered carbon The realization of forestry s potential in developed countries depends on the depth of cuts in greenhouse gas emissions together with in country rules on forestry An increase in funding for carbon retention in tropical forests is an immediate imperative but complexities dictate that the sources of finance will likely be dedicated funds rather than carbon markets This timely and comprehensive book will be of great value to any reader interested in climate change Policy makers within international agencies and governments academics and students in the fields of geography economics science policy forestry development studies as well as carbon market participants and forest developers in the private sector will find it especially useful

Embracing Diversity in the Learning Sciences Yasmin B. Kafai,2012-10-12 More than a decade has passed since the First International Conference of the Learning Sciences ICLS was held at Northwestern University in 1991 The conference has now become an established place for researchers to gather The 2004 meeting is the first under the official sponsorship of the International Society of the Learning Sciences ISLS The theme of this conference is Embracing Diversity in the Learning Sciences As a field the learning sciences have always drawn from a diverse set of disciplines to study learning in an array of settings Psychology cognitive science anthropology and artificial intelligence have all contributed to the development of methodologies to study learning in schools museums and organizations As the field grows however it increasingly recognizes the challenges to studying and changing learning environments across levels in complex social systems This demands attention to new kinds of diversity in who what and how we study and to the issues raised to develop coherent accounts of how learning occurs Ranging from schools to families and across all levels of formal schooling from pre school through higher education this ideology can be supported in a multitude of social contexts The papers in these conference proceedings respond to the call EPA-430/1 ,1979-05 Optimizing the Delivery of Multiple Ecosystem Goods and Services in Agricultural Systems Maria A. Tsiafouli,Evangelia G. Drakou,Alberto Orgiazzi,Katarina Hedlund,Karl Ritz,2017-10-18 Agricultural land is subjected to a variety of societal pressures as demands for food animal feed and biomass production increase with an added requirement to simultaneously maintain natural areas and mitigate climatic and environmental impacts The biotic elements of agricultural systems interact with the abiotic environment to generate a number of ecosystem functions that offer services benefiting humans across many scales of time and space The intensification of agriculture generally reduces biodiversity including that within soil and impacts negatively upon a number of regulating and supporting ecosystem services There is a global need toward achieving sustainable agricultural systems as also highlighted in the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals There is hence a need for management regimes that enhance both agricultural production and the associated provision of multiple ecosystem services The articles of this Research Topic enhance our knowledge of how management practices applied to agricultural systems affect the delivery of multiple ecosystem services and how trade offs between provisioning regulating and supporting services can be handled both above and below ground They also show the diversity of topics that need to be considered within the framework of ecosystem services delivered by agricultural systems from knowledge on basic concepts and newly proposed frameworks to a focus on specific ecosystem types such as grasslands and high nature value farmlands pollinator habitats and soil habitats This diversity of topics indicates the need for broader scope research integrated with targeted scientific research to promote sustainable agricultural practices and to ensure food security National Environmental Laboratories United States.
