Enzymes and Cellular Regulation

(Illustrate the factors that regulate the activity of the enzyme catalase (catalase))

WUPT

Enzymes are protein-based biological molecules that play a crucial role in most life. They help various metabolic reactions, such as cell respiration, and are responsible for various processes in the body's metabolism. Enzymes function as catalysts and are highly specific to their substrates. They are also sensitive to environmental factors such as temperature, pH, and concentration. They may work in an active site, which is a specific region on the enzyme's surface where the substrate binds. The active site is often shaped like a lock and key, where the substrate fits into the active site. The enzyme's activity is regulated by various factors, including the presence of cofactors, inhibitors, and activators. The enzyme's activity is also regulated by the cell's internal environment, such as the pH and temperature.
