Ovarian Cancer Targeted Medication: PARP Inhibitors, Anti-Angiogenic Drugs, Immunotherapy, and More, volume II Zhaoqian Liu, Jing Wang, Naiyuan Wu, Guang Lei, Zhi-Bin Wang, 2025-02-21. Ovarian cancer is the malignancy with the highest rate of death from tumors of the female reproductive system, and the main treatment options are tumor reduction and post-surgical platinum-based chemotherapy. Unfortunately, some patients will develop platinum resistance after multiple recurrences. Given that ovarian cancer is a heterogeneous disease with complex molecular and genetic alterations, the identification of specific molecular targets will be of great benefit in gaining a deeper understanding of the mechanisms of ovarian cancer development and progression. As research into targeted therapies continues, the treatment of ovarian cancer is gradually shifting from conventional chemotherapy to targeted therapies. Targeted drugs such as PARP inhibitors and anti-angiogenic drugs have become important modalities for the maintenance treatment of ovarian cancer. At the same time, targeted therapy also suffers from ineffective use, high rates of adverse reactions, and high prices. With the development of next-generation sequencing technology, targeted therapeutic agents developed for specific molecules in ovarian cancer may provide a wider range of treatment options for ovarian cancer patients and offer new strategies for individualized treatment. Immunotherapy, as well as ferroptosis pathway modulation, has also provided new ideas for targeted therapy in ovarian cancer.

It also discusses the two most

Evidence-Based Practice for Public Health Emergency Preparedness and Response National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine, Health and Medicine Division, Board on Population Health and Public Health Practice, Board on Health Sciences Policy, Committee on Evidence-Based Practices for Public Health Emergency Preparedness and Response, 2020-11-28 When communities face complex public health emergencies, state, local, tribal, and territorial public health agencies must make difficult decisions regarding how to effectively respond. The public health emergency preparedness and response (PHEPR) system with its multifaceted mission to prevent, protect against, quickly respond to, and recover from public health emergencies is inherently complex and encompasses policies, organizations, and programs. Since the events of September 11, 2001, the United States has invested billions of dollars and immeasurable amounts of human capital to develop and enhance public health emergency preparedness and infrastructure to respond to a wide range of public health threats, including infectious diseases, natural disasters, and chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear events. Despite the investments in research and the growing body of empirical literature on a range of preparedness and response capabilities and functions, there has been no national-level comprehensive review and grading of evidence for public health emergency preparedness and response practices comparable to those utilized in medicine and other public health fields. Evidence-Based Practice for Public Health Emergency Preparedness and Response reviews the state of the evidence on PHEPR practices and the improvements necessary to move the field forward and to strengthen the PHEPR system. This publication evaluates PHEPR evidence to understand the balance of benefits and harms of PHEPR practices with a focus on four main areas: PHEPR engagement with and training of community-based partners to improve the outcomes of at-risk populations after public health emergencies; activation of a public health emergency operations center; communication of public health alerts and guidance to technical audiences during a public health emergency; and implementation of quarantine to reduce the spread of contagious illness.
