

A Step-By-Step Guide To Removing Spyware From Your Computer

Before we get started with the step-by-step guide on how to remove spyware, lets first take a look at what exactly spyware is and why it is so bad to have on your computer.

Spyware is basically a computer program which is installed to a computer. Usually this happens without the user of the computer knowing it has been installed. What spyware does is not just 'spy' on a persons computer, it can also install other programs to the computer (again, without the user knowing) and can even take over the control of the computer. It can also gather web surfing habits, your name, credit card info and all kinds of other personal and/or confidential information. Needless to say, having spyware on your computer is a VERY BAD thing to have.

So how can you tell if you have spyware? We will go in depth on this topic more so below but in general if your computer is running slow and/or is just acting funny in general (popup advertisements, error messages, etc), there is a good chance those things are being caused by spyware.

Ok, so we know what spyware is and what it can do, how do we get rid of it? Fortunately its easy if you follow the steps below...
