Abstract: Phragmites australis (Common Reed) is a dominant species in coastal wetlands and is a major component of the salt marsh ecosystem. It is a highly invasive species and has been found to be a major threat to the salt marsh ecosystem. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of Phragmites on the salt marsh ecosystem. The study was conducted in a salt marsh in the state of Maryland. The study area was divided into two sections: a control section and a Phragmites section. The control section was a salt marsh without Phragmites, and the Phragmites section was a salt marsh with Phragmites. The study was conducted over a period of two years. The results of the study showed that Phragmites had a significant negative effect on the salt marsh ecosystem. Phragmites reduced the diversity of plant species, the abundance of invertebrates, and the amount of sediment in the soil. Phragmites also reduced the amount of water that infiltrated the soil. The results of the study suggest that Phragmites is a major threat to the salt marsh ecosystem and that it should be controlled.
