FAKE NEWS

F

the first few days last week, the news was dominated by reports of a major earthquake in the Pacific Northwest. The reports were so intense that many people were convinced that a major disaster was about to strike. However, as the days passed, it became clear that the reports were false. The earthquake never happened, and the news was a complete fabrication.

Another major headline from the same period was the announcement that a new space shuttle had been launched. The shuttle was supposed to carry a large payload of scientific instruments and was expected to make several important discoveries. However, the shuttle was launched with a major malfunction, and the mission was a complete failure. The shuttle was forced to land prematurely, and the payload was lost.

These two examples illustrate the importance of verifying news reports. In a world where so much information is being spread so quickly, it is easy to be misled by false news. It is always best to check the facts and to be skeptical of any report that seems too good to be true or too shocking to be believable.

Labels of some commercial detergents are not clear regarding the content of the base. Many such labels state that the detergent is "free" of some substance, such as phosphates or sodium hydroxide.
