Digital systems have penetrated every stage of the printing process, from formatting the author's manuscript, to distributing and storing the print. Maintaining a smooth workflow requires the consistency of digital data throughout the production process. Furthermore, consistency is vital to controlling expenses that everyone involved in the production process has an understanding of digital assets.

It is pointed out that many governments have not as yet adopted computer programs as the gold standard for computer interoperability. This is not the case. For this reason, many organizations, such as the American National Standards Institute (ANSI), the International Standards Organization (ISO), and the Joint Photographic Experts Group (JPEG), have created standards by which digital media and equipment must operate in order to be compatible. Due to the amount of information and the vast number of products available, this chapter covers general information that applies to digital imaging operations.

DIGITAL BASICS

The desktop computer has become the focal point of the modern manufacturing plant and shops. Its capabilities allow the graphic communications industry. The computer and associated devices, in conjunction with the specialized graphics programs, are components in the digital graphics system. Figure 5-1.

A computer uses a binary system to process and store information in digits (bits). This means that the computer recognizes only two conditions: 0 (digit 0) and 1 (digit 1). These digits represent two values, on (1) and off (0). The individual 1s and 0s are called bits, or binary digits, and can be combined into groups of eight digits to create a binary word, or byte. Since there are four possible combinations of 1 and 0, it is an eight-bit byte that 00000001 is 00000001, a typical byte that stored in memory is quickly becoming a single consideration.

Figure 10. Using worst-practices data reported in the most common method of computing and the ground factoring, 4 companies are designed for about the same benefit to gross contribution as 15 years.
