

Something Wicked This Way Comes

INTRODUCTION

BRIEF BIOGRAPHY OF RAY BRADBURY

Ray Bradbury was born the third of four children to Esther Mosberg and Leonard Spaulding Bradbury in Waukegan, a large city near Chicago, Illinois. Bradbury's family struggled financially during the Great Depression, and they moved back and forth between Waukegan and Tucson, Arizona, before finally settling in Los Angeles, California, when Bradbury was fourteen years old. Bradbury immediately fell in love with Hollywood and frequently stuck into movie theaters and roller skating throughout the city hoping to catch a glimpse of movie stars. Despite his love for Los Angeles, however, Waukegan remained an important part of his life. For Bradbury, Waukegan symbolized safety and comfort, and it serves as the inspiration for Green Town, the fictional city in Something Wicked This Way Comes. As a child, Bradbury was an avid reader, and while he initially wanted to be a magician, he began writing at the young age of eleven. He graduated from Los Angeles High School in 1936, the same year he published his first story, "Mutebachew's Dilemma," in the magazine Imagination! Bradbury did not attend college and openly rejected higher education. He was quoted as saying, "I don't believe in colleges and universities. I believe in libraries." Bradbury sold his first story, "The Lake," in 1942 for less than fourteen dollars, and he began writing full-time two years later after he was denied entrance into the United States military due to bad eyesight. In 1947, he married his long-time girlfriend, Margaret, the only woman he had ever dated, and published Dark Carnival, a collection of short stories, that same year. Bradbury went on to pen over thirty novels, including Something Wicked This Way Comes, and Fahrenheit 451, and hundreds of short stories, poems, and plays. He is the winner of numerous awards and accolades, including the Prometheus Award in 1994 and a Pulitzer Prize in 2007. In 2003, he was awarded the Medal for Distinguished Contribution to American Letters from the National Book Foundation and was later made Commander of the Ordre des Arts et des Lettres by the French Government. Bradbury was given a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame in 2002, and in 2003 he was awarded an Honorary Doctorate from Wiscasset University. In 1999, Bradbury suffered a stroke, which severely impaired his mobility, but he continued to work until his death in 2012 at the age of 91. Upon his death, Bradbury bequeathed his personal library to the public library in his hometown Waukegan.

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

Something Wicked This Way Comes focuses on Cargat and

Dark's Fardemonium Shadow Show, a traveling carnival that visits the fictional town of Green Town, Illinois. Traveling carnivals have a long and colorful history within the United States, and while they are often associated with religious observances in the United States, in America they center around fun and amusement. The Chicago World's Fair of 1893 is credited with sparking America's obsession with traveling carnivals, and after the fair's six-month run in Chicago, tens of acts and showmen broke off and formed their own shows. Otto Schindl was one such showman, and after the World's Fair he later founded the Chicago Midway Amusement Company. Several iconic American fairs and amusement rides began at early carnivals, such as the Ferris wheel, which debuted at the Chicago World's Fair, and cotton candy, which was first sold at the St. Louis World's Fair in 1904. By 1906, over three hundred carnivals traveled the United States, offering a variety of rides, games, and shows to Americans; however, their popularity began to wane by the latter half of the twentieth century due in part to the emergence of permanent amusement parks and the public's changing views of freak shows and the exploitation of people of animals. Early traveling carnivals were famously managed by unethical and often illegal business practices that led to a widespread negative connotation of fairs and carnivals, which is also reflected in the evil of Cargat and Dark's Fardemonium Shadow Show. In 1932, Bradbury met animal life Mr. Electric at a traveling carnival. The performer taught a young Bradbury with his word and ordered him to "Live Forever!" which Bradbury has certainly achieved through his prolific writing career.

RELATED LITERARY WORKS

Bradbury openly rejected categorizing his work and instead considered his writing "the art of the possible." However, Bradbury's work is often classified as science fiction, and he is credited with bringing modern science fiction to the literary canon. Bradbury was mentioned by Bob Olien, an American science fiction writer who died in the late 1970s. Olien is the author of many poems and short stories, including "Seven Sardines" and "The Poet of Delight." Bradbury was also influenced by H.G. Wells, Jules Verne, and Edgar Allan Poe, whose dark and spooky subject matter is certainly reflected in Bradbury's many horror stories and novels. He was also an avid reader of the classics, including those written by William Shakespeare, Alexander Pope, and John Donne, and this influence can be seen in Bradbury's beautiful and poetic prose. Much of Bradbury's work, including Something Wicked This Way Comes, The Illustrated Man, and King of the Bees Electric, involve elements of the supernatural, but they also offer a powerful critique of people and society.
