Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, supervised, low-impact, aquatic exercise program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of older adults. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The participants were 60 older adults (mean age = 70.5 years) who were randomly assigned to either an exercise group or a control group. The exercise group participated in a 12-week, supervised, low-impact, aquatic exercise program. The control group participated in a 12-week, supervised, low-impact, aquatic exercise program. The study was conducted in a community center. The participants were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The primary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured by the 6-minute walk test. The secondary outcome was the change in health-related quality of life, measured by the SF-36. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant improvement in physical fitness and health-related quality of life compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week, supervised, low-impact, aquatic exercise program can improve physical fitness and health-related quality of life in older adults.
