

Barriers to Trade

The harmonization of national export and import regulations, free trade is a system wherein all the goods of governments have free trade across international frontiers for the benefit of their own economies. Once the free trade system is in place, there have been various international trade wars, with significant changes during the 1990s. Examples of these wars include the United States/Canada Trade Agreement (NAFTA), the World Trade Organization (WTO), the European Union (EU), and the North Atlantic Trade Agreement (NAFTA).

However, there are some countries that are not free trade. Some countries have been able to protect their markets from foreign goods that would hurt their domestic industries. In the United States, for example, the government has been able to protect its domestic industries from foreign goods that would hurt its domestic industries. The government has been able to protect its domestic industries from foreign goods that would hurt its domestic industries. Figure 5.12
International Trade

It shows that international trade has a total supply of goods and services. The domestic supply curve is upward sloping. The foreign supply curve is also upward sloping but lower than the domestic supply. The intersection of the domestic supply curve and the foreign supply curve is at price P_3 and quantity Q_3 . This is the domestic supply of goods and services. The intersection of the domestic supply curve and the foreign supply curve is at price P_3 and quantity Q_3 .
