These results, and the failure of others, are very important. In fact, although numerous attempts have been made to study the effects of stress on the immune system, the only study that has shown a clear effect of stress on the immune system is the one by Cohen and Wills (1985). In this study, Cohen and Wills found that people who were stressed had a higher rate of illness than people who were not stressed. This finding is very important because it shows that stress can have a direct effect on the immune system. It also suggests that stress may be a risk factor for illness.
