

Respiration Article & Follow-Up Questions

CELLULAR RESPIRATION

All living things need energy to survive and carry out life processes. Whether an organism makes its own food through photosynthesis or eats another organism for food, all organisms* use the same process to turn their food into usable energy. This process is called cellular respiration.

Mitochondrion

Cellular respiration is a chemical reaction that happens in an organelle called the mitochondrion (plural: mitochondria). Mitochondria are found in the cells of nearly every organism on Earth. While almost all cells in the human body contain mitochondria, cells that require a lot of energy, such as muscle cells, can contain hundreds or thousands of them.

All organisms need a source of food. In the cellular respiration, plants are performing photosynthesis. Glucose is a simple sugar that is made by plants. Cellular respiration is a chemical reaction that happens in the mitochondria. At the end of the process, the cell has harvested energy in the form of ATP (adenosine triphosphate). Carbon dioxide (CO_2) and water (H_2O) are produced as waste products from this reaction. In general, animals breathe out the waste products carbon dioxide and water (as water vapor) when they exhale. Plants use the carbon dioxide and water to perform photosynthesis to make more glucose for an energy source. Excess water may leave the plant stomata in a process called transpiration.

*There are some exceptions to this. Some organisms in extreme environments use a process called chemosynthesis.
