

Homeostasis (pp. 72-83)

Organisms develop internal mechanisms, often hormonally-mediated, to maintain relatively constant internal conditions.

A regulated variable must be maintained within a normal range of values, relative to set point, or reference level.

There are 4 types of regulated variables (homeostatic factors):

- 1) Temperature
- 2) Ion balance and composition of body fluids
- 3) Glucose level in blood plasma
- 4) Blood Pressure

Homeostasis is maintained as a result of homeostatic mechanisms.

Homeostasis of temperature is negative feedback.

Regulated variable is system keeps regulated variable within a normal range by reversing any upward/downward shift in the variable. I.e. it moves in opposite direction to its deviation.

Regulated variable is kept constant by its independent effectors, receptors, and effectors.

A variable increases or decreases the body's temperature as signals from the central system. Homeostatic system the regulated variable to the normal range.

In the body, activity maintains relatively constant body temperature and is regulated by a specific homeostatic system. It has chemical receptors, neural signals growth as well as sense that body temperature within the reference is then the set point.

Receptors transmit set or signal to sense the components of the feedback loop.

Regulated variable homeostatic response and then body return to its normal state.

Reversing the response.
