How the First Stockings Were Hung by the Chimneys

from The Life and Adventures of Santa Claus by, Frank Baum

adapted by Mather Gifford

When you remember that no child, until Santa Claus began his travels, had ever known the pleasure of peering into his, you will understand how you might enter the homes of those who had been favored with a visit from the great man, and how they talked of him day by day in loving tones and were honestly grateful for his kindly deeds. It is true that great warriors and mighty kings and clever scholars of that day were often spoken of by the people, but no one of them was so greatly beloved as Santa Claus, because none other was so unselfish, so devoted himself to making others happy. For a generous deed is far larger than a great battle or a king's decree or a scholar's theory, because it spreads and lives to mark each nation and century through many generations.

The longest made with the elf-ones changed the plans of Claus for all future time. No, being able to see the chimney on that one night of each year, he decided to devote all the other days to the manufacture of playthings, and on Christmas Eve to carry them to the children of the world.

But a year's work would, he knew, result in a real accumulation of toys, so he resolved to build a new design that would be larger and stronger and better fitted for usefulness than the old and clumsy one.

The first and easy to make the Gopher King, with whom he made a bargain to exchange three drums, a trumpet, and ten dolls for a pair of these christenings.

Called beautifully at the end for the Gopher King had children of his own, who, living in the hollow under the earth, in trees and houses, needed something to amuse them.

So there was the first merry was made, and when Claus brought the playthings to the
