Abstract: The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program was designed to be safe and enjoyable, and to be easily implemented in a community setting. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The first session was a warm-up, followed by a 10-minute aerobically and resistance training program, and a 10-minute cool-down. The second session was a 10-minute aerobically and resistance training program, followed by a 10-minute cool-down. The third session was a 10-minute aerobically and resistance training program, followed by a 10-minute cool-down. The program was evaluated using a pre-test and post-test design. The results showed that the program had a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the women. The authors concluded that the program was a safe and effective way to improve the health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

The group was composed of a physician, a nurse, a pharmacist, and a social worker. The group was charged with the task of developing a patient safety program. The group met for several months and developed a patient safety program. The program was implemented in the spring of 1995. The program was successful in reducing the number of patient safety incidents. The program was also successful in increasing the awareness of patient safety among health care providers.
