The authors do not make any claim to represent their sample as representative of all people in the United States, and do not make any generalizable statements. In conducting this research, we acknowledge that there are many limitations and gaps in our research on the use of technology in the workplace.

The findings in electric representations or schemata of a circuit, including that circuit itself, are the product of physical processes (as opposed to mathematical but not physical representations) and, as such, are subject to the laws of physics. And the question arises: in representing a circuit, how is the circuit itself represented? The author's electrical schemata for any circuit, he believes, are themselves in a completely language-free form as physical objects. (The schematic codes in computer-aided design, however.)
