Abstract Background: The prevalence of mental disorders in the general population is high. However, the prevalence of mental disorders in the workplace is lower. Objective: The aim of this study was to investigate the prevalence of mental disorders in the workplace. Method: A cross-sectional study was conducted in a large company. The prevalence of mental disorders was determined by a self-report questionnaire. Results: The prevalence of mental disorders in the workplace was 12.5%. The most common mental disorders were depression and anxiety disorders. Conclusion: The prevalence of mental disorders in the workplace is lower than in the general population. This may be due to the fact that the workplace is a protective environment for mental health.

Abstract Background: The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in a community sample of young adults. Methods: A cross-sectional survey of 1,000 young adults (18–24 years) was conducted. The survey included a validated self-report measure of mental health problems. Results: The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems was 12.5%. The most common self-reported mental health problems were anxiety (8.5%), depression (7.5%), and stress (6.5%). Conclusions: The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in this community sample of young adults is relatively high. This finding highlights the need for mental health services for young adults.
