Cultural Heritage and Aerobiology Paolo Mandrioli, Giulia Caneva, Cristina Sabbioni, 2013-06-29 Aerobiology is the science that studies the biological component of the atmosphere and its effects on living systems and on the environment. This term was used for the first time in 1935 but the attention of scientists to the biological component of the atmosphere goes back to 1769 when the Italian biologist Spallanzani carried out a series of experiments that disproved the concept of spontaneous generation of life and proved the presence of viable microorganisms in the air. Aerobiology has marked characteristics of interdisciplinarity; its application fields range from respiratory diseases to the airborne outbreak of animal and vegetal diseases and to the biodegradation of substances and materials. The latter is the subject of this book. The purpose of aerobiological research applied to the conservation of cultural heritage is to evaluate the risk of alteration by airborne microorganisms of materials forming artefacts of historical, artistic and archaeological interest. Airborne spores and vegetative structures may develop on different substrates and may be a cause of degradation in relation to the types of materials, the microclimatic situation and the pollution of the conservation environments. The qualitative and quantitative evaluation of the biological component of air performed by means of targeted analysis campaigns and of the characteristics of materials and environments supplies indispensable information for the evaluation of the actual risk and the planning of interventions. This book is divided into four main parts. Handbook of Microbiology Allen I Laskin, 2019-07-23 Included in the present volume are selected pages from Volume I, II and IV of the CRC Handbook of Microbiology. Data from Volume II has not been included: microbial products which did not lend itself readily to the selection of a few pages. As it is, the present volume includes information about the various groups of microorganisms, their cell walls and their genetics. Data on amino acids, carbohydrates and lipids are included together with diagrams of metabolic pathways and information on immunocompetent cells. General reference data include a glossary, statistical tables and other information that is hoped to be found useful by the reader.
